Mississippi Based Firm Partners with Family Law Specialist

JACKSON - February 1, 2008 – Robinson, Biggs, Ingram, Solop & Farris, PLLC, a full-service law firm serving the Greater Mid-South area, announced today its partnership with M. Craig Robertson and his family law litigation and mediation group of attorneys. The blending of the practices brings a unique element to this firm which opened its doors in the spring of 2006 and has experienced exponential growth since that time. The firm's home office is located in the heart of downtown Jackson, with satellite offices located in Oxford and Little Rock and now Ridgeland and Meridian.

Craig Robertson is a Board Certified Family Law Specialist by the National Board of Trial Advocacy and is a founder of a small litigation firm that grew from a solo practice to an office of four attorneys in two cities with a complete support staff in less than one year. Robertson was formerly with the well-known L.C. James and his James and O'Brien Family Law Group. Robertson's practice is concentrated exclusively in domestic relations litigation and mediation, and he brings youthful energy and innovation to this up-and-coming fixture in the Mississippi legal community.

Robertson joins a highly touted group of domestic relations attorneys within the firm, including Stuart Robinson, Sr., a 24-year veteran of the Hinds County Chancery bench, Ronald D. Farris, a former Mississippi State Senator from Hattiesburg and a member of the Board of Directors of The Mississippi Bar Family Law Section, and David E. Rozier, Jr., a former Municipal Court Judge for the City of Jackson and the partner in charge of the Oxford office.

“Joining Robinson, Biggs, Ingram, Solop & Farris allows us to continue to provide our clients with first class service in domestic relations, while creating a synergetic relationship for not only the attorneys, but also for our clients. Our association with the firm will allow me to have even more hands-on daily contact with our clients, leaving the administration and business side of the profession to the veterans” said Robertson. Stan Ingram, the firm's managing partner, opined that “family law has become an integral part of our judicial system and clients expect their lawyers to be able to provide that service.

Craig brings to the firm that element of diversification, enabling us to represent our clients in as many areas of need and interest as possible.”

Joining Robertson is recent Mississippi College School of Law graduate and New Orleans native Ashley L. Buckman. M. Devin Whitt and Chad Smith will also continue to work on firm clients with Robertson.

The firm has also announced that Mark E. Power, Jr., a former teammate of Robertson on the Mississippi State University baseball team under head coach Ron Polk (1994-1995), has been named a member of the firm. Power advises clients concerning Real Estate, Forestry and Environmental Laws and Regulations, Corporate and Partnership Organization and the purchase, sale, lease, development and financing of improved and unimproved Real Property. “No pun intended, but gaining the services of Craig and Mark is a homerun for both the firm and its clients,” stated Ingram.

Also joining the firm is Jeremy P. McNinch who practices primarily in the area of Construction and Surety Law, Commercial Litigation, Public Contract Law, and Governmental Relations. Jeremy has a strong background in Engineering, Science and Mathematics and has invaluable insight regarding the technical issues that commonly arise in litigation.
